

FUTURE READY SELLING

There are three simple phases to making these practices work for you. These phases are simple ways to break down what we've learned and then put it into an order and sequence so that it all comes together and makes sense. These are simple steps that, when practiced and applied, will give you the same type of results that the top sales professionals get.

PHASE 1 - PREPARING YOURSELF

To practice future ready sales, you have got to be prepared. The top sales professionals are prepared for every call while the amateurs are trying to wing it. I've learned, "to wing it is the surest way to the sidelines."

Know your stuff. You have got to know your product and presentation. You do this by studying your materials and practicing your presentation over and over again.

Know your customer's stuff. This means you need to do some research so you know as much as possible about the person you are doing business with. Know what they like and dislike. Find out their hobbies. Find out who their friends are. Do you have any friends in common? Find out who their customers are.. If you do not know the particular person you will be calling on, you can do this by researching the Internet or asking the person who referred you. You can also research the industry in general and the job description of the person you are calling on.

Prospecting. You've got to prepare by keeping a solid foundation of prospects. This means you have got to fill up your pipeline with cold leads and get referrals on every sale. Prospecting is a numbers game and none of this works unless you are playing the numbers.

Control your mental and emotional state. You have got to be mentally and emotionally prepared for every sales call. Why? Because the state you are in determines your performance.

How do you control your state? You can control your state by following step one and two (knowing your stuff or knowing your customer's stuff). This alone will boost your confidence level.

You can also control your state by:

1. Visualization – Picture the results you want in your mind.
2. Affirmations – Speak out loud the positive things you want to create in your life.
3. Building stronger beliefs.
4. Having goals and dreams.
5. Balanced living.
6. Books and audios – Read and listen to information that is knowledge based and uplifting.
7. Exercising – Emotion begins with motion, so get moving.
8. Smiling – It's been scientifically proven that you can control your attitude by controlling your facial gestures.
9. Positive Peer Pressure - We become like the people we hang around most of the time. Choose your friends wisely.
10. Asking questions — If you ask yourself better questions, you will get better answers that will empower your state of mind.

The following are some positive questions you can use to empower your state of mind.

How much are they going to buy?

What is good about this challenge?

How many referrals are they going to give me?

How can I make the prospect my friend?

How can I make this sales call more interesting?

How can I get the customer to pay attention and have fun while doing it?

What else can I do to help them want to do business with me?

What can I do to turn this challenge into an opportunity?

What can I learn from this?

PHASE 2 – PREPARING THE CUSTOMER

Now that you are prepared, the second phase to making these practices work for you is to get your customer prepared for buying. You do this by making initial contact, making a good first impression, gaining rapport, and grabbing their attention.

Here is how you do it:

Initial contact. The first step to preparing the customer is making initial contact. To sell anything, you've got to present what you are selling to someone. Good first impressions are important. Here's how you make a successful initial impression:

1. The way you walk in the room. U.C.L.A. did a study and discovered that 57% of what a buyer remembered about someone had to do with the way they walked into the room.
2. Smile and compliment.
3. Dress neatly.
4. Good personal hygiene.

Gain rapport. Once you make that initial contact, it is important that you gain rapport. Rapport is the ability to connect with and relate to other people. It is the ability to get them to invest in you emotionally. Here's how you gain rapport:

1. Ask questions. Questions will:

- ✓ Help you find things in common.
- ✓ Show you care.
- ✓ Help you test close.
- ✓ Take the pressure off of you.
- ✓ Build reciprocation.

2. Reciprocation. You give them something. This could be an actual gift or a discount. It could be a helping hand or free tips that can assist them in some way; to save money, become more aware, educate them, motivate them, etc.

3. Act like them. People like people who are like them.

- ✓ Voice tonality
- ✓ Breathing
- ✓ Posture
- ✓ Touch

4. Tell them a story that's relatable, funny or emotional.

5. Give them a compliment.

6. Listen Most of the time. Let them finish their sentences or stories. Be congruent, which means to be in agreement or harmony. Remember, the customer is always right, even if they are wrong.

7. Social proof. Show them testimonials of other satisfied customers. Name drop on happy customers they might know.

Gain their interest. As you are developing rapport, you must gain their attention. You are a distraction until you have their interest. You do this by:

1. Stating a claim. Example:

✓ "Our

_____ system can save you 30% while guaranteeing a 99% on-time delivery."

✓ "If I could show you how to save money, feel more confident and work with someone that has relationships with _____, _____ and _____, would you be interested?"

✓ "If you could develop a personal relationship with a supplier where you become a priority, not just a number, would you be interested?"

✓ Giving them a reason you stated the claim using "because." "Because" is the most powerful word in the world. The need to justify our actions is so strong that we accept the word "because" even if the words after it are not logical. Example: "The reason I say this is because..."

✓ "I've done this for _____ companies (or individuals) in the last year with 99 percent customer satisfaction."

✓ "We have proven results from thousands of satisfied customers..."

2. Tell them what's in it for them. Example: "What this really means is..." ✓ "You have the opportunity to achieve _____ while knowing you are working with someone who is committed to your best interest."

✓ "You will save a lot of money and have the results you want instead of (past problems)."

✓ "You will be able to have more _____ (time, money, energy, health, happiness, etc.) to do the things you want to do, and you will have someone you can count on to do the job right."

3. Back up the claim by:

✓ Name dropping

✓ Demonstrating the product

✓ Giving them facts

✓ Telling third-party stories

✓ Using testimonials

PHASE 3 – HELP THEM BUY

The third and final phase to future ready sales is to help the customer buy. Earlier, I said that selling is to lead and to serve. This means you must lead your customer through the buying process until it successfully ends with a sale.

If you really believe you are helping others, you know that your products fill a need by providing more value than what you are charging, and if you are serving others in a way that can make a real difference in their lives, then you are ready to make the sale. To make the sale, you must make buying easy, create a long-term customer, and have them help you get more customers in the process.

BALANCING ACT

The biggest challenge for all salespeople is to get people to make the buying decision. Most people are in an act called “indecision.” They are right in the middle of the scales and they can’t make up their mind. Your job is to tilt the scales toward buying by giving them plenty of positive reasons to buy and showing them the consequences if they don’t.

They must believe it is a:

Win/win situation if they buy.

Lose/lose situation if they don’t buy.

THE WAYS YOU CREATE WIN/WIN ARE:

You have integrity.

The product or services are needed.

The product or services will do what you say they will do.

They can justify it because the value or the products or services are greater than the money they are spending.

They have urgency because they need it now.

You deliver more than promised.

You follow up and follow through

You give them a reason to do it today

EMOTIONALOGIC

Emotionalogic is a word I talked about earlier to describe how good salespeople tilt the scales in their favor. All sales are driven by positive and negative emotion. The “pleasure emotion” of buying and the “pain emotion” of not buying. They are also driven by the emotion of fear: Fear of buying and fear of not buying.

The customer must associate:

“Pain” to not buying.

“Pleasure” to buying.

People buy because they are convinced it will be a win/win situation if they do buy and a lose/lose situation if they don’t. People don’t buy products or services. They buy the feeling they “believe” the product or service will give them.

You have got to have emotion, “positive and negative.” You want to make it easy for them to buy and extremely painful if they don’t buy, and you back up the emotional reasons to buy with plenty of logical reasons to go ahead and do it now. You must have logic. The buying decision is emotional and justified with logic. So, your job is to stir them up a bit emotionally. Then you give them some logic and ask for the order.

HOW DO YOU CREATE EMOTIONALOGIC?

1. Find their hurts. How do you do this? You do it through questions. Questions will guide the customers to and give you the answers you need in order to sell them. Different questions get different answers. The more answers you can know to the questions ahead of time, the better.

The

key is to ask the right questions that will guide the customer in the direction you want them to go. If you ask different questions, you will get different answers.

For example, if I asked you, “What was the most screwed-up thing in your life?” you could probably find a lot of answers. But I could also ask you, “What is the best thing in your life?” and you could also give me a lot of answers.

Here are examples of questions that will help you to find their hurts:

“What was the worst experience you ever had with _____?”

“Tell me some problems you have had in areas?”

“What is your nightmare scenario that could happen if you don’t do this?”

2. Find their FEARS. In business, sales and life, “fear” is a motivating “factor” in anything we do. Most people are afraid to take action because of:

Fear of failure

Fear of success

Fear of the unknown

Fear of peers

Fear of missing something or being left out

There are five universal fears that cross all boundaries, including gender, religion and race. For every fear there is also an opposite human need. Following are the five fears and the human needs:

1. Fear of death < > need for security. 2. Fear of the outsider < > need for social interaction.

3. Fear of the future < > need for clarity.

4. Fear of chaos < > need for authority.

5. Fear of insignificance < > need for respect.

You must make people’s needs for buying, or even their fear of not buying, greater than their fear of buying. What is an example of people’s fear of buying?

Maybe it is not worth it.

It is going to mean hardship.

It won’t produce the results I was promised.

What if other people judge me and even reject me because of this?

What if I buy and I really don’t need it now?

3. Heal their hurts and fears. Once you have created lots of emotion, it is now time to heal their hurts and fears by making them want your product. You do this by showing them how your product solves their problems and eases their fears.

This means you must create a tremendous want for your products or services. Desire will motivate your client to take action, but they gotta want it. They have to link up in their mind and thoughts a warm fuzzy feeling about your products or services. All good sales presentations are designed to set up a defining moment or two where a person decides they want the products or services.

This can be accomplished by:

Using the customer's imagination. Do this with words, pictures, powerpoints, videos, testimonials etc.

Creating a warm fuzzy feeling.

Help them understand and feel the worst case/best case scenarios.

You may be asking, "Is there really emotion in my product?" Absolutely, there is always emotion and feeling with any product. People buy because:

They want the best.

They want friendships.

They want a relationship with you.

They want to be intelligent.

They want confidence.

They believe it will make them more successful.

They want to avoid pain.

They want more money.

They want more friends.

Other people have bought it and they want to keep up with everyone else. There's a scarcity (limited number or limited time) and they may lose out if they don't do it now.

Example: The following are some questions you can ask that will help stir up their wants. Get them to smell it, feel it, taste it, touch it and see it.

"Mr. Prospect, am I correct in assuming that anything less than the best is not going to make you feel the way you want to feel?" "Is it worth less money for the risk it is going to create for you by not having this?"

"When you own this product and _____ happens is that what you really want?" "If all these things we said about our products and services are true, can you imagine what owning them could do for your _____ in the next two years?"

"What could be great if you owned this product or service?

In your opinion, what would be the three most important reasons for you to do business with us today?"

4. Justify it with logic. The customer must be able to justify buying it. The way a customer justifies buying a product is when they believe in their mind that the value they are receiving is more than the money they are spending. You get people to justify buying a product by showing them how it can:

Save them money

Save them time

Make them feel better

Save them stress

Make them look better

Provide safety and security

Make them money

TEST CLOSE

Get your "no's" out of the way. Objections usually mean they want more information. The best salespeople in the world get most of their sales after they get five or more objections. So, get excited when you hear objections because they allow you to find out why the customer is not buying. Unless you know the objections, you can't make the sale. Objections are really questions in disguise. The more "no's" someone gives you, the more they want to give you a "yes." Objections are actually a form of reciprocation and the customer feels more obligated to give you a "yes" after they have told you "no."

Use "in your opinion" and "do you feel questions." Example:

"In your opinion, if you are going to make a decision, what would be the best decision?"

"Do you feel that saving money and having the opportunities you want is worth looking into?"

How would you feel if you could save money and live more comfortably at the same time?

We deliver the products /services on Friday or Saturday, which would be best?

MAKE THE OBJECTION FINAL

Your goal is to break it down to the ridiculous and bring out any other objections so you can get your final objections.

"If we were able to handle and

_____, do you feel that you would want to go ahead?" "Would it make sense to do it now if we could handle your requests of
and

_____?"

"If we could overcome _____ challenge, would you want to go ahead with this?"

GET THEM TO SAY "YES"

Make buying easy by getting them to say, "yes" by using either and or.

Example: "Do you want this Thursday or Friday?"

"Do you want the executive or economy model?"

"In your opinion, do you feel you want to go with brown or blue?"

Pointing out what they want it for.

"You want a that will do _____. Is that correct?"

"You want a product that will help you do correct?"

and _____ on time and every time. Is that

MAKE THE SALE THE BEGINNING

The top salespeople make the sale the beginning in two ways:

1. By getting referrals. Most people don't ask for referrals.

- ✓ One referral equals ten cold calls.
- ✓ Spend most of your time and effort on new business.
- ✓ Believe they will give you referrals. For example:

Have I done a good job for you?

Could you do me a favor in return?

Could you give me the names of _____ people?

2. Keep the customer for life. You do this by building relationships. You build relationships by:

- ✓ Doing what you say you will do
- ✓ Send thank you notes. Call them to say hi and see how they are doing
- ✓ Drop by
- ✓ Take them to lunch
- ✓ Treat them to sports or other hobbies
- ✓ Put them on your preferred customer mailing list.
- ✓ Reciprocate by sending them business or doing business with them.
- ✓ Do business with them

EXERCISE: Write down three emotional reasons (positive or negative) why people buy your product or services.

1.

2.

3.

EXERCISE: Write down three logical reasons that justify the purchase of your products or services.

1.

2.

3.

EXERCISE: Make a list of the common objections you get and how you would overcome them.

CONCLUSION

FIVE QUESTIONS EVERY CUSTOMER NEEDS TO KNOW THE ANSWERS TO:

1. “What is it exactly that I am spending my money for ?” You can answer this if you are prepared to explain the product in a purposeful manner.
2. “What’s in it for me if I spend the money?” Will it really give them what they want and what they need? They need to know why they should want this.
3. “Will it really be worth it?” Are they spending their money for nothing? Are they really going to get something of value? Something that can make them money, enhance their life, use and reuse, or is worth more than the money they are paying?

4. “Can I trust you?”

Are you here just to make a sale?

Do you have their best interest at heart?

Are you honest and trustworthy?

5. “Can you prove it?”

6. Do you have others who have purchased it and achieved the results I’m looking for?

7. Do you have credible data or testing to back it up your claims?

8. How do I know yours is the best?

Answer those questions in advance and you will put them in a state of wanting to buy. You will influence them.

Wow, now that you have completed this book, I want to congratulate you.

Just by reading this and following the exercises, I am convinced that your levels of income and quality of life have already increased substantially. However, reading this once is just the beginning. If you want to make the most of these strategies, you have to make them a normal and natural part of your daily routine. This means bettering your best, improving your habits, and never settling for less.

IMAGINE THE POSSIBILITIES

Imagine what would happen to your income and the quality of your life if you didn’t do anything else but:

- ✓ Became a master at just one part this program.
- ✓ Put yourself in the right mental state every day.
- ✓ Increased the number of prospecting calls you make weekly.
- ✓ Got better at getting your customers attention.
- ✓ Raised your belief levels about yourself and your products or services.
- ✓ Created more conviction on every call. ✓ Created more congruency and rapport.
- ✓ Made a few positive changes.
- ✓ Became a better team player because of this.
- ✓ Learned a few more impactful questions to ask potential prospects.
- ✓ Set some big goals and went for them.
- ✓ Became totally proud of selling and the products or services you sell
- ✓ Made new decisions about the quality of your life and the standards you live by.
- ✓ Made a new decision about your future and the freedom you desire.

What if you realized these skills are not just for making money but for living a better life? Would you say this program had been a tremendous success?

Right now, I want to challenge you be the best you can be and make a commitment to constantly and continually better your best. I want to challenge you to constantly raise your bar and raise your standards. I want to give you new hope for a better future because you know that you are Future Ready.

This is a new start and a new beginning to your Future Ready Sales success. Right now I want you to say “yes” to:

- ✓ Yes to Yourself

- ✓ Yes to Your Family
- ✓ Yes to A Balanced Life
- ✓ Yes to Your Dreams
- ✓ And Yes to The Next Level of Success

It has been a pleasure and a privilege.